3.1. Important Notes

- A one-time courtesy credit may be considered by Microsoft for valid Azure charges incurred due to customer error or misunderstanding. If approved, the credit is available only once per Microsoft Entra ID tenant for the lifetime of that tenant. Any future courtesy credit requests for the same tenant will be denied by Microsoft.

Example: A customer provisions a high-cost resource without fully understanding the associated charges. Microsoft expects customers to review and understand pricing before deploying resources.

- Microsoft has sole discretion over the approval and issuance of courtesy credits. TD SYNEX does not influence or control Microsoft's decision-making process.
- TD SYNEX does not issue courtesy credits. However, resellers may choose to provide credits to their end-user customers at their own discretion. Microsoft does not require resellers to bill all charges incurred to their customers.
- A courtesy credit is distinct from credits related to billing errors, unauthorized usage, or fraudulent activity. Microsoft evaluates and processes those situations through separate support and review procedures.
- The review and approval process for a courtesy credit may take several months. Once approved, application of the credit may also require additional processing time.
- TD SYNEX automatically passes through any credits received from Microsoft. Resellers should review their TD SYNEX invoices to confirm when a credit has been applied.
- Resources associated with the credit request should be deprovisioned before the request is submitted. Courtesy credits are not intended to offset the ongoing cost of production workloads, active resources, or proof-of-concept environments.
- Microsoft will not reimburse reseller-added markups or service fees. If adjustments are required for those amounts, the reseller is responsible for determining and applying them.

3.2. Process

1. The reseller copies the form provided in Appendix A into a new email and completes all required fields.
2. The completed form is submitted to Msft-SE-Azure-NA@tdsynnex.com.
3. TD SYNEX reviews the request and, if appropriate, opens a support case with Microsoft.
4. Microsoft reviews the request through its internal approval process. This review may take several months to complete. Microsoft does not provide an escalation path for courtesy credit requests during the review process.
5. Microsoft determines whether the request is approved or denied.
6. If approved, Microsoft specifies the credit amount it is willing to provide.
7. TD SYNEX notifies the reseller of the approved credit amount and requests written confirmation of acceptance.
8. Upon reseller acceptance, TD SYNEX authorizes Microsoft to proceed with issuing the approved credit.
9. Microsoft applies the credit through its internal billing processes. This step may take several months to complete.
10. TD SYNEX passes the credit through to the reseller upon receipt from Microsoft.
11. The reseller is responsible for monitoring TD SYNEX invoices to confirm receipt of the credit, as separate notifications are not provided when the credit is applied.

A detailed explanation of what happened, by who and why the customer believes they should receive a credit.
A list of the resources that were charged that they want credited.
The time frame – bill months – for the credit.
The total $ amount requested.
Were the resources that caused the charges removed?
Changes they made to ensure that the issue does not recur.

The resources that caused the charges should have already been removed.

It is up to Microsoft to determine if they want to provide a credit. TD SYNnex will pass through any credit received.
